Stormy Weather

It was an ordinary day for Robert Turner and he was in his office listening to the radio. He worked as a photographer for the local newspaper and he was organising his schedule for the next day. He was just finishing and about to go home when a severe weather warning came over the radio. Strong northeasterly winds were expected to create high tides and people, were warned to stay indoors. Robert decided to drive to the seafront on his way home to take some photographs of the rough sea to go in tomorrow's edition.

Robert grabbed his hat, coat and his camera and jumped into the car. He was thinking about how some great shots of the crashing waves would look on the front page. As he got closer to the seafront he saw that the winds were really strong and the sea was much rougher than he had expected. He parked his car behind the breakwater and walked down to the pier. He didn't intend to stay long, he just wanted to get a few shots and head for home because he knew it would be dangerous to stay on the seafront.

Just as he was about to leave he felt water at his feet. He looked up just in time to see a huge wave come crashing down on top of him. "Oh no! Aaagh..." his cries were drowned by the roar of the waves. He was lifted up by the force of the water and thrown 30 feet into the air. He came crashing down onto the beach and a big chunk of wood from the pier landed on top of him. He was shocked and scared and then he noticed that his leg was bleeding and his trousers were torn. He thought he had better get out of there quickly.

He managed to drag himself up, and limped back to the car. He didn't realise that he was badly injured as he drove to his friend Tom's house. As soon as Tom saw the wound on his leg he acted quickly to try to stop the bleeding. He took Robert to the hospital straight away, where he had 100 stitches. "You're a very lucky man" the nurse told him. "You could have lost your leg."

A little later Tom came to see him in his hospital room. "What a daft thing to do" he said to Robert, "I hope the photos are worth it." Robert's face fell and he told Tom that he'd lost his camera and so he would never know. Tom was smiling as he reached into his bag and showed Robert the camera he thought he had lost. "Where did you find it?" he asked in surprise. "I found it near what's left of the pier. It was under some debris" said Tom. The camera was battered and broken, but dry and no water had got inside.

When the photos were developed they made the front page of all the local papers. Robert was paid a lot of money for them and he became famous as the man who risked his life for his job. He was happy that everything had turned out alright, but decided to stick to photographing safer things in future like babies, and politicians.
